The first is John Lennon, the most misunderstood Beatle (a lot of people think he was the actual leader). A lot of people just remember him as an older, more settled band. Don't be fooled--without him, the Beatles might have gotten more attention. John Lennon: the Quiet Beatle John Lennon was the most anti-Beatles-touched member of the band. The closer he got to their studio life, the more he missed his wife, his family, and music. After he married Cynthia, Lennon tried to keep his life as normal as possible, especially when he was in the United States. He didn't start living a more private life until he'd moved to New York and started recording and writing new songs for the first album (the Beatles had written a bunch of songs, but they'd waited to record them until the end of 1964). His little daughter, Julian, was born in December of 1963, and it was the first time that Lennon had a child and the first time that a Beatle was a dad. Despite Lennon's long absences, and the fact that the Beatles didn't record much of anything, "Strawberry Fields Forever" was their first song written as a group, and the song marked the beginning of the Beatlemania fad. Still, because of his family situation, Lennon couldn't totally commit to the Beatles. On the road, Lennon always had a city apartment, and when the group traveled with them, he was usually at home. Eventually, he became so absent, the rest of the band started to have some identity crisis (all the press added to
